

November 6, 2006

She's Back! Brightlight Pictures and Uwe Boll announce "BloodRayne 2"

(Vancouver, BC) – Brightlight Pictures will collaborate again with Uwe Boll on "BloodRayne 2", a vampire action movie based on Majesco Entertainment's video game, it was announced today by Brightlight Pictures principal, Shawn Williamson. German filmmaker, Dr. Uwe Boll ("BloodRayne", "House of the Dead") will direct and Natassia Malthe ("Elektra") will star in the title role. Shawn Williamson and Dan Clarke are producing. "BloodRayne 2" is set to film in and around Vancouver later this autumn.

"BloodRayne 2" is the sequel to "BloodRayne", starring Kristanna Loken, Ben Kingsley, Matt Davis, Michelle Rodriguez, Michael Madsen, Billy Zane and Meatloaf, which was also a Brightlight Pictures / Uwe Boll collaboration, directed by Boll. Released on DVD earlier this year through Visual Entertainment, "BloodRayne" marked the first time a theatrical release was packaged with the complete original PC game which inspired it.

In BloodRayne 2 the movie, as in the game, only Rayne, born of the unnatural union of vampire and human, stands between an unsuspecting humanity and a horrifying vampire dawn. The screenplay is written by Christopher Donaldson and Neil Every.

In addition to the BloodRayne franchise, Brightlight Pictures and Uwe Boll have partnered on a number of features, directed by Boll, including "House of the Dead", the box-office success released by Artisan Pictures; "Alone in the Dark", starring Christian Slater; and the upcoming "Postal Seed" and "In the Name of the King: A Dungeon Siege Tale", starring Jason Statham, John Rys-Davies, Ray Liotta, Leelee Sobieski and Burt Reynolds.

"BloodRayne 2 marries the vampire, action and West West genres, and we are very excited that this movie is going to innovate a fantastic new look," says Shawn Williamson.

"I'm excited to do a sequel to BloodRayne and this time in the Wild West. I'm a big fan of Sergio Leone and John Ford," says Uwe Boll.